Fire starts in local printing shop, exotic birds rescued

Fire broke out Sunday afternoon at 3615 Lemon Grove Avenue in the A-Source Creative Concepts building.

Five fire engines, a truck and a light and air unit responded to the call at approximately 3 p.m. and quickly put out the fire.

The cause of the fire is currently under investigation, but it appears that the fire may have started in a pile of scrap paper that the printing company, which makes bingo cards, was preparing to dispose of.

Most of the damage to the building is smoke damage and one of the printing presses may have been damaged by the fire.

The cost of the total damage is estimated to be as high as $300,000.

The second story of the building also served as a storage center for birds and bird supplies.

Lemon Grove Firefighters were able to rescue several birds worth thousands of dollars.

Plans for a new park in Lemon Grove move forward

The Lemon Grove City Council took additional steps Tuesday night to provide Lemon Grove with a new park.

The Council held a public hearing to consider removing the park designation of property on Osage Drive and reapplying it to a parcel of property on Lemon Grove Way. The park on Lemon Grove Way will fill a need in the northeast corner of Lemon Grove for a park, and it may be one of the City's last chances to build a park. Councilman Brian Cochran said, "I think this is a good opportunity for the City, one that will be lost forever if not taken now."

The owner of the one-acre parcel of land on Lemon Grove Way, Larry Boerner, will receive in exchange a three-acre parcel on Osage Drive (known as Eppick Park). Boerner hopes to develop the single-family residential property on Osage Drive into a single-family residential subdivision with a density of seven or less units per acre.

The exchange requires state legislation and the City has been informed that the bill introduced by Assemblyman Pete Chacon is on its way to the Assembly's Ways and Means Committee.

The Council also took steps to alleviate a difficult situation involving the Flower Barrel Florist Shop and the expansion of the shopping center it is a part of in the 6900 block of Federal Boulevard.

The owners of the shopping center had requested a conditional use permit to renovate the shopping center and establish a martial arts studio in what used to be the Color Tile building. As a result, an environmental impact study was done and it showed that, due to an increase in traffic from the martial arts classes, the Flower Barrel would create traffic problems in its present location. The property owners explained that they intended to remove the Flower Barrel in connection with their renovation project and relocate it in the shopping center, but the conditional use permit for the martial arts school proceeded faster than the renovation project.

Because a new building has not been constructed for the Flower Barrel yet, and if the florist shop were forced to close its doors until the new building was constructed it would lose a great deal of business during its busiest season, the Council voted to allow the Flower Barrel to stay in its present location until August 15, when the new building is expected to be completed.

City staff said the City would be assuming minimal risk concerning the traffic problem between the time that the martial arts studio is in place and the Flower Barrel is removed. The City plans to lessen the risk by striping and signs at the shopping center's entrance.

Another matter of concern to local merchants, the undergrounding of utilities on portions of Broadway, Lester Avenue, Grove Street and Washington, was also voted on by the Council. At a previously held public hearing to consider this matter, property owners voiced their opposition to the undergrounding of the utilities because of the cost. The Council continued the public hearing in order to obtain estimates on what the cost of undergrounding the utilities (from the building to the street) would be to property owners. An electrical contractor estimated that the average cost per lineal foot of trenching for commercial conversion is $50 and the average distance is thirty feet, for a total trenching cost of approximately $1,500. The cost for a new meter box is approximately $2,000, bringing the cost of the conversion close to $3,500.

The estimate for the average cost of trenching for a residential conversion is $750 and the cost of the meter installation is between $500 and $800, bringing the cost to residential buildings into the $1,500 range.

Two local property owners, Dennis Stover and Dell Lake, told the Council that the cost of the conversion would represent a hardship to many property owners and urged that Council against this action.

The Council voted two to one to form the underground utilities conversion district.

Finally, those who enjoy the Senior Center will be pleased to hear that the City staff is looking into the installation of a flagpole on the Center's grounds.

An Eagle Scout, Carson Bohr, is hoping to turn the installation of the flagpole into his Eagle Scout project and the City has asked him to submit a proposal to Jack Shelver outlining the details of the project. Bohr had indicated that he would be contacting local merchants and organizations to donate money and materials to aid his project.

If the project is not appropriate as an Eagle Scout project, the matter would be referred to the Nutrition Project Site Council and the City would welcome a proposal from them to install the project, with the understanding that they will provide volunteers to raise the flag in the morning and lower the flag in the afternoon after their programs are complete.

Rush Rowley said he was behind the Eagle Scout one hundred percent, but if he was unable do the project, Rowley would take it on himself.

Pilot psychiatric treatment program for anxiety and stress sufferers begins at Grossmont

A new one-of-a-kind psychiatric treatment program is being piloted at the mental health center at Grossmont Hospital.

"We're adding new dimensions to mental health care in San Diego," said Irving Baran, M.D. clinical director of the Brief Strategic Treatment Program.

The new program is designed for adult patients who, typically, have not experienced problems, but may be seriously affected by situations which upset their daily routines.

"Sometimes, a difficult life transition -- like a death or job loss or even a happy event like a marriage or a birth -- can produce disturbing symptoms for a time, causing a person to have difficulty in dealing with everyday situations," explained Baran.

This is an intense program for those suffering from depression, stress and anxiety.

Personal comments of Councilman Bob Burns

Parks aren't what they used to be

Everyone knows that we just do not have enough parks. It is true that most cities are woefully deficient in the amount of actual park acreage, according to purported needs. The standards are determined by old people like me, who recall the enjoys of parks in the "old days."

Parks were where a family went to picnic on a Sunday afternoon, to play baseball or to toss the football around to that six-year old Jim Brown, or maybe an eight-year old Joe Montana.

Remembering how wide the eyes got when you pushed that swing to its limit and the glee in that little face when we caught her at the bottom of the slide. Whether the repast was fillet mignon or hot dogs, it was the nectar of the Gods, and all of the together families around us were in similar ecstatic states.

Usually, there were horseshoe pits to test the mettle of the older folks, and even a cribbage game for the dads, while the moms knitted booties or took care of the leftover meals. Parks were for families, and were enjoyed by every age group and in concert with other families who were there for the same reason. A neighborhood park was almost always occupied and was well-respected in deference to others who would be using it as well. Parks are in the same category as motherhood, apple pie and the flag.

Today, all of the above is still possible, but there is a dark side to parks. Land is expensive, and a city or county government is considered as deep pockets, so that any land that they acquire for park purposes will be at a top dollar, forget the universal benefits. Also, the NIMBY principle (Not In My Back Yard) comes to bear very forcibly. We all want the benefits, but "Not In My Back Yard."

The noise, the assemblage of cars that spill over onto the adjoining streets into residential neighborhoods, the pedestrian traffic and the trash, all have adverse effects on the adjacent residents.

The park area that was just begging for use by our young people was spotted by the youth soccer group. They assembled to practice, at off-times, and what could the land be better used for? The whistles, the screaming parents and coaches, and the flying balls that damaged adjacent properties canceled the benefits. It was decided to plant trees at random across the fields to prevent organized games, and to prohibit such disrupting goings on. My grandson did not speak to me for weeks over this one.

The horseshoe pits were taken over by groups who monopolized them to the extent that everyone else was excluded. Family groups "took over" the areas for the entire weekends, and thus, the facilities were torn out and not allowed. The picnic areas were taken over by big parties. In college, we called them "beer busts," and they pretty much crowded out a family picnic nearby. The situation is often that grandparents just will not take their grandchildren "to the park" for an afternoon because of what has taken over these areas. Other things that are going on in public place are well-known: drug deals, immoral actions and language that most of us do not want our young children exposed to, are commonplace. The graffiti is horrendous, and one who takes a young child into a restroom in any park, may well be happy that they are too young to read.

Repair of facilities, painting out graffiti, and police protection in our parks amounts to big bucks, yearly. The lawn care, and landscaping is pretty constant, but also, is expensive. These ongoing costs should be balanced against the value. It seems to this writer that unless law enforcement can assure us that parks will be what they are intended for, that maybe they are are obsolete. Spending big bucks for places for beer drinkers, drug dealers, and God knows what what else seems dumb to me. Why bulid more parks to do the same? Apple pie is fattening, motherhood created the populaton boom, and they are burning the flag.

Councilman Bob Burns will address matters of concern to Lemon Grove and its citizens. If you have questions or suggestions for Dr. Burns, send them to P.O. Box BB, Lemon Grove, 91946.

Recycling makes sense

After actually witnessing the EDCO Recycling truck in action, out in front of my house, I began a piece on the program. Halfway through it, I received a newsletter in my mailbox with some startling statistics, and I almost threw it out with the junk mail before realizing what it was.

So, just in case anyone either missed getting it, or did toss it out with the junk mail before realizing what it was.

Everyone knows that recycling is just good business, and certainly common sense for the environment.

In the early days, the idea of limits was just unheard of regarding our natural resources. There never would be an end to the supply of oil, of minerals, or of wood for fuel and paper products. Trees would certainly grow fast enough to replace those that we used up, wouldn't they? They say that Bauxite, the ore that produces aluminum, is one of the most plentiful mineral compounds in the Earth's crust. And, in high school chemistry, we learned that matter cannot be either created or destroyed, so why worry?

Now we know that the degree of waste and speed that we are using up these resources is now a proper definition of the word, 'finite.'

The city council had trepidations that the recycling program would not only pose added work on each of us in separating and setting out the materials, but would also cost extra money to do so. We had a cautious confidence that Lemon Grovans would cooperate and make the program work once they realized the seriousness of its goals.

I am proud to say that it is a huge success, and we are doing our part in fine style.

Most everyone that I talk to is more focused on the larger benefits of the project than the slight increase in cost.

With all due respect to EDCO, they had to invest a considerable amount of money for the special trucks to make the special trips to pick up recyclable materials. If you haven't seen one of the large white trucks in action, try to catch one in actual operation.

Lemon Grove and Coronado were the first to get into the program and now have a years of experience to evaluate, now there are five cities involved and the total savings are: 14 million kilowatt hours of electricity, over 51,000 trees and 10,000 cubic yards of landfill space is unused as a total result of the effort.

The average monthly participation varies from 40 to 80 percent. This figure could well gauge a level of cooperation, but also may reflect the selective shopping practices of the community.

Only aluminum, tin cans, glass, polyethylene plastics, newsprint and mixed paper products are recycled. Of course, there are many other forms of trash that must be landfilled, and it is estimated that if 50 percent of all trash was recycled, there would still be two million tons of waste that would have to be "stored " in our canyons and on our precious San Diego land.

Selective shopping could be a major measure to eliminate waste.

Try to avoid disposable items. Going back to cloth diapers that served very will for our five children would save lots of landfill. Try to buy things that are biodegradable if disposable, reusable utensils, and durable so as to last longer as with light bulbs and batteries. Recyclable items, of course, reusable packaging, and bulk purchases, all reduce waste.

EDCO has a very efficient composting process on display at their office at 6700 Federal Blvd., here in Lemon Grove.

Some garbage and almost all yard trimmings can be turned into excellent fertilizer and soil amendments.

One last thing about EDCO ... the money that they get from the resale of recycled materials is woefully short of paying the cost of processing it. But, just maybe if the ultimate in cooperation on the part of all of us were to occur, it is almost assured that the balance would be closer. Let's all try harder to make that happen.

Helix Key Club provides fun for students and service to the community

by Kress MacLaren

Key Club, the student service organization at Helix High, has been very active so far this year.

The club, run by President Julie Pilkington, has helped with many community projects, ranging from a bowl-a-thon, which raised money for those with cystic fibrosis to their most recent project, decorating a Parade of Roses float.

All of the members have had fun with each of their activities, according to Pilkington.

Junior Shannon McLauchlan said, "Decorating floats for the Parade of Roses was rewarding because we were able to see behind the scenes of a major event before the rest of the viewing public."

The Key Clubbers were also happy to see the float they worked on win.

Another project Key Club participated in over the holiday season received great recognition, as well.

According to member Carrie Cass, the group helped make ornaments and Christmas decorations at a Christmas workshop for children held at the La Mesa Community Center.

"It was a lot of fun working with the kids. It was a project aimed at making the children's Christmas brighter," said Cass.

The Helix Key Club has become a strong group. Recently, they earned the Project 2000 award given by Kiwanis International.

"This award is given when a club increases club membership by over 100 percent," said adviser and English teacher Ray Mounts.

According to Mounts, a future project will be a fund raiser for the Make-A-Wish Foundation which benefits children who are terminally ill.

This foundation is the club's official philanthropy on the district level.

With a growing membership and strong leadership, Key Club will continue to aid the community, added Mounts.

A Just War?

by Paul Treske

The dictionary defines just as: 1. In accordance with the principles of justice; fair. 2. Rational and informed.

Many of us, from President Bush and Billy Graham on down, have agonized in recent weeks over the concept of the "just" war. Both sides have not only claimed justice to be with them, but God as well. Prayers to both God and Allah have floated skyward, asking everything from victory to the safety of a loved one.

How God will respond, if at all, I do not pretend to know, but of one thing I am certain: There is no such thing as a "just" war. Often, there may be a "necessary" war, but never a "just" one.

Has any war ever proceeded in accordance with the principles of justice? Has war ever been fair? Have the mass destruction and innumerable agonizing deaths of both soldiers and the innocent in war ever been rational? I do not believe that by any definition a war can be just.

No, wars, instead, must be judged as necessary or unnecessary ... and there are necessary wars. World War II has been often cited as the "last just war." To be sure, it was a necessary conflict. There was no choice but war. Adolph Hitler and an expansionist Japan posed threats to most of the world's free nations, and appeasement led only to surrender.

But for those who died in the Egyptian desert, the beaches of Normandy, the firestorms of Dresden, the blitzes of London, or the streets of Hiroshima, there was no justice. To the families of thousands of American soldiers with nothing left but pictures and memories, there was no justice. And to the many millions of men, women and children who died in concentration camps during World War II, there was no justice.

I believe that the war in the Persian Gulf today is necessary. Those who say that Saddam Hussein is not akin to Hitler, do not see the scope and power-base potential of the Middle East and the incipient capacities of this man to forge a holy war that would sweep through the Eastern Mediterranean with fire and death. He must be stopped ... and earlier rather than later.

But when innocents die and homes and carefully built livelihoods are swept away there is no justice.

So, let us allow that the war is necessary, and hope and pray that it ends speedily and victoriously. But let us not seek to call it a "just" war. There is no such thing.

Make mine dry!

by Frank Andrews

The California drought brings back memories of the "Shifting Sands" of the '30s. The hot dry winds blew the soil, along with the people, westward. Remember the movie, "Grapes of Wrath?" That depicted "Okies" on the move. Most of them settled in California as prune pickers. I know 'cause I married one.

People from the Midwest headed for Alaska. The government gave the settlers free virgin hinterland to clear and farm. That was a tough life, only for the heartiest. The few families that braved the extreme elements and stayed on, reaped some fantastic crops: cabbage as big as basketballs, potatoes over a pound a piece, and so on, for veggies and fruit that needed long, sunny days but a short growing season.

On my visit to Manatuska Valley in Alaska, I was privileged to meet some of those original settlers and listen to their hardship stories. The sun really shines at midnight; consequently, such rapid growth. It is difficult to grow crops that require a normal growing season, such as tomatoes, corn, etc. Of course, there are no drought seasons, as it rains everyday or every night.

The hardships of a great depression, coupled with the drought, made life mighty hard in those "Terrible Thirties." Could our present generation withstand such conditions along with the current war? Do we know what it is to "tighten our belts?"

Just think of the horrible things a real drought could cause us out here in southern California to sacrifice; like not enough water for the huge golf courses and swimming pools. Can you imagine how many pint-sized private lawns could be kept green or how many toilets could be flushed with that much water?

The vineyards of the North country would shrivel up, and thus, no vintage wine. Now, that is the grandaddy of all sacrifices! Maybe the drier the weather, the drier the wine. "Make mine extra dry."

My family has learned to live on very little water from our many years down in Mexico. All our dulce agua" (sweet water) had to be carted down in 5-gallon jugs. By eating lots of cheese and drinking very little liquids we could make our water last. With the ocean for a bath tub, water for bathing was almost nil.

With two-thirds of the earth consisting of water, why can't we convert the salt water into usable fresh water? There is a desalting plant presently working on the island of Cuba, and the Arab countries depend on processed salt water for their very existence. Nearly every "casa'" in our little village of Puertecitos, Mexico, had miniature desalting plants that worked very well. It is so pure that minerals have to be added to make it more palatable.

Wet or dry, hot or cold, broke or rich, we Americans can weather any storm and come out smelling like a rose.

Padres begin with new outlook, old problems

Padre pitchers, catchers, last year's sick, lame or injured players, along with assorted coaches, staffers and other selected supernumeraries who have not already done so, will be packing up and moving to Yuma this weekend to start spring training.

For whatever reason, manager Greg Riddoch feels he can give the rest of the National League a head start, Padres pitchers and catchers are the last group of batterymen to open camp.

The Padres are also a day behind everybody, save the Chicago Cubs, in scheduling full-squad workouts, but Riddoch should have some idea of who can do what, by the time the Anaheim Angels visit Yuma on March 8th for the Cactus League opener.

It's a new season, and the Padres are steaming into harm's way with a crew as new as morning dew. The Padres are opening camp with new owners (15 of 'em), a rookie general manager, an inexperienced field manager, a group of coaches that had to be introduced to each other, new uniforms, a pair of new superstars from the other league, and some unhappy campers left over from last year's roster.

Taking a positive stance, rookie VP/GM Joe McIlvaine says he feels good about the 1991 Padres' prospects.

"We have All-Stars or potential All-Stars in five of the eight everyday positions," he told a recent gathering of sportswriters and sportscasters. Indeed he does.

McIlvaine's blockbuster trade of the winter brought former American League All-Star shortstop Tony Fernandez and power-plus hitting first baseman Fred McGriff to the Padres. Fernandez is a three-time All-Star and a four-time Gold Glove award winner. McGriff belted 105 homers over the last three years, while averaging 87 RBIs.

Tony Gwynn is back patroling right field in his usual All-Star fashion, and Benito Santiago will go on proving he is the best catcher in the National League. Both want better contracts.

The fifth All-Star type starter is, of course, Leon Joseph "Bip " Roberts, the lead-off batter looking for a place to play.

Where does Riddoch plan to play Roberts? Good question. His natural position would appear to be second base, but newcomer Marty Barrett is crowding in on that position. Marty is 33, and coming off an injury, but he can hit and is rated a smart player. His lack of range and speed may keep him mostly on the bench.

Roberts has also played third base and left field, but only because management needs his bat at the top of the lineup card.

Newcomer Jim Presley will get a good look at third. He is error-prone (led the National League with 25 last year while with Atlanta), but he has some power, and could improve his fielding on natural grass. Both Presley and Barrett are "maybe's."

Those are big "maybe's," and that still leaves a pair of outfield positions. Third base and the outfield are power positions and all Riddoch has to add out there are question marks.

"We'll have some competition out there," says Riddoch. Competition is fine, but you only play nine players at a time.

That's what Riddoch and his coaching crew will be trying to do this spring training. Cut the confusion out of the competition and get down to pitching and eight solid everyday players.

The Padres won't admit it, but isn't this a building year?

The Truth about Consequences

by Joseph Walker

Meet Linda.

Sixteen, blond and beautiful, she seems to have everything going for her. She's got talent. She's got style. She is a warm, vibrant personality that attracts people to her.

Her parents have enough money that they can provide for all of her necessities, and quite a few extra opportunities and privileges as well.

Life, it would seem, is good for Linda. Except for one thing.

She is failing.

Three years ago, Linda was a neighborhood favorite, a delightful and promising girl. Today, she's trouble-on-the-run, and parents find themselves warning their children about not getting too close to Linda, no matter how much they might enjoy her company.

What happened? Drugs? No. Alcohol? Well, yes, as a matter of fact. But that was more a symptom than a cause. There isn't anything that's been done to Linda that can help us understand why she struggles with life as she does.

As near as I can tell, it's what hasn't been done that is to blame -- and no, this isn't one of those "spare the rod and spoil the child" diatribes.

Somehow, during her growing up, Linda had never learned how to accept the consequences of her actions. Either she's been protected from them, or they haven't been pointed out to her as they came along -- I'm not exactly sure which -- but she doesn't know how to handle the weeds in life's flower garden. So when they pop up -- as they always do, eventually -- she either runs away from them, or she decides that she'd rather grow weeds anyway, and she lets them take over the garden and choke out the flowers.

In Linda's world, if things get tough at school, you just quit because "you just go to school to get a job, and I've already got a good job."

If you have a run-in with the boss, you just quit because "I can always get another job; besides, my parents will give me money if I really need it."

And if you get tired of living with Mom and Dad's rules, you move out: "I can live on the streets. I don't need them. I don't need anyone."

Scary, isn't it? Scarier still, is the realization that Linda isn't alone. There are thousands of young men and women in America who are making mistakes that will last a lifetime, because they just don't understand the consequences of their actions. They live in the here-and-now, with no thought for the future and no respect for the past. They can't relate to the freedom a good education will one day afford them; all they can think about is how confining school and school rules are right now. Anything that isn't "fun" is "boring," and there is nothing worse than to be boring.

Yeah, yeah, I know. It hasn't been that long since I dragged my feet to school and plopped myself resentfully in a desk, and complained about boring subjects and boring teachers. But the difference between then and now is that most of us went to school anyway, and we did our work -- sometimes, only because we feared the consequences of doing otherwise.

Linda and many of her peers don't share that concern. In fact, they don't care much about anything except getting through life, hour by hour, without having to do anything they don't want to do.

Don't get me wrong. There are also great kids today, doing great things. I'm not ready to give up on the entire generation.

I'm not even ready to give up on Linda. But, I'm concerned with what I see as a developing trend.

And, unless parents begin focusing more time and attention on teaching their children about accepting life's consequences and the importance of making short-term sacrifices for longterm rewards, we will find ourselves facing an increasingly challenging world with citizens who have less to offer society -- except, perhaps, more experience with failure.

Joe Freed on the Movies

This Week's movies: King Ralph and The Silence of the Lambs

King Ralph

When the entire English royal family is electrocuted in a freak accident, scholars find discovering a new heir nearly an impossible task. Finally, after days of frantic research, a remote descendant is located ... in Las Vegas. Enter Ralph Jones (John Goodman)-- by the grace of God, King of England, protector of the faith; lounge lizard, vulgarian and fast-food junkie.

For Ralph, ascension to the throne just seems like a great career move. What the heck, he's between jobs anyway, and a palatial existence does have its perks.

Unfortunately, King Ralph didn't count on official uniforms, state banquets, international diplomacy and the threat of assassination. With the help of his private secretary, Willingham (Peter O'Toole), Ralph tries to behave in a manner befitting a king.

The premise of "King Ralph" is charming, but is developed poorly. The most humorous scenes feature both Goodman and O'Toole, and the laughs come from their conflicts in character. Ralph's clowning pitted against Willingham's English propriety make for a kind of royal "Odd Couple." However, writer/director David S. Ward soon abandons the duo and focuses instead on HRH Ralph the Pig.

We get to see Ralph guzzling beer, destroying royal artifacts, visiting burger joints and drooling over local strippers. The Academy-Award winning screenwriter of "The Sting," is capable of more than he presents in this movie, and at the very best, one might describe "King Ralph" as cute.

Goodman is stereotyped as the well-meaning lug (as in "Always," "Arachnophobia," Stella," and TV's "Roseanne"), but I guess he's likable enough. Peter O'Toole offers his usual strong support, as does John Hurt as Lord Graves, a villainous member of Parliament who plots Ralph's downfall.

Critic's rating: C

The Silence of the Lambs

Jodie Foster and Anthony Hopkins star in director Jonathan Demme's thrilling adaptation of the best-selling novel by Thomas Harris. Foster is Clarice Starling, an FBI trainee pulled out of training by her superior (Scott Glen) to assist in the search for a serial killer, Buffalo Bill (Ted Levine). Enlisting the help of an incarcerated sociopath, the brilliant Dr. Hannibal Lecter (Hopkins), Starling trades personal information about her past for Lecter's knowledge of Buffalo Bill. I know it's early, but I predict Oscar nominations for Foster and Hopkins next year. As the inexperienced trainee, Foster's mixture of enthusiasm and fear is brilliant. Starling is forced to prove herself in a competitive, predominately male arena, utilizing her knowledge and seductiveness. Hopkins gives one of the finest performances of his career Hannibal Lecter, although a murderer, is a genius. With one whiff, he can tell you what skin cream you used three days ago, and with one discussion he can make you release your innermost secrets. Hopkins plays the doctor with sophisticated charm.

I, too, was seduced by the Lecter' charm, and even though he was a murderer and a cannibal, I liked him ... even wanted him to escape. Hopkins' performance made the movie.

Screenwriter Ted Tally adapted the Harris novel faithfully, and Jonathan Demme employs a dizzying style and pace. "The Silence of the Lambs" is a masterful thriller.

Soviet pianist, Igor Len, to play Theatre East concert at ECPAC

Music of Johann Sebastian Bach will take on a distinctly Russian flair when the great Soviet pianist, Igor Len, takes the stage at Theatre East, Sunday February 24, at 4 p.m.

Len will be accompanied by the International Chamber Players, a group of talented musicians handpicked from throughout the world. The concert is part of a classical music series called "Sample the Classics" and will include two Bach concerti and a suite for flute and strings.

Igor Len began his study of the piano at the age of four. In 1980, he entered the Moscow Conservatory with the distinction of being the top pianist from the Latvian Republic. After receiving his doctorate, he began teaching piano at the Riga Conservatory, In 1989 Len was voted the third best keyboard/pianist in a nationwide Soviet poll held by a Russian newspaper. Multi-talented, Len is also a composer, having written the soundtrack for the Rein Liblick film, "Returning." Classical music is not the only genre in which Len excels. He formed and leads the popular New Age Music Orchestra Art Concert, which has recorded two albums. In addition he has appeared in concert with Carlos Santana, Alfonso Johnson, Thomas Dolby, Brian Adams, Bonnie Raitt and James Taylor.

Tickets for the "Basically Bach" concert are $10 for adults, $8 for seniors, students and members of the military. For more information, call the box office at 440-2277.

Youngsters invited to enter Humane Society/ S.P.C.A. poster contest

Any youngster, in first through twelfth grade, could win a $100 U.S. Savings Bond in the 1991 Responsible Pet Ownership Poster Contest, sponsored by the San Diego Humane Society and the S.P.C.A.

The Society will award first, second and third prizes in four different grade divisions for posters which in some way tell people to be responsible pet owners.

Winners will be announced during national Be Kind to Animals Week, May 5-11. Prizes also include San Diego Humane Society T-shirts, miniature puppy and kitten sand sculptures, a behind-the-scenes tour of the Society's Shelter, and more. All winning posters will be displayed at the Del Mar Fair. Every youngster who enters a poster will receive a special certificate from the Society, commemorating his or her participation in the contest.

"When youngsters understand the importance of being responsible pet owners, and treating animals humanely, it truly does help build a society that's kinder and gentler," said Fred Lee, executive director of the Society, "and, of course, if children learn this early in life, it helps prevent future animal neglect and abuse."

All posters must be submitted to the Society by April 18. For more information, call 299-7012.

Irene and Frank O'Connor

Obituary

Francis "Frank" E. O'Connor, 94, a retired businessman, died after a brief illness on Wednesday, February 13, 1991 in Sharp Memorial Hospital. He lived in the San Diego area for almost 50 years, mainly in Lemon Grove and Lakeside.

Mr. O'Connor was born near the turn of the century in Bemis, South Dakota and was educated in Minnesota where he attended college and the seminary. He entered the Army during World War I.

He and his late wife, Irene Adams O'Connor, owned and operated a motel in Fresno, as well as businesses in Lemon Grove, Mission Beach and Pine Valley.

During World War II, Mr. O'Connor was in personnel management at Consolidated Vultee, which later became part of General Dynamics.

He had a similar post at National Steel and Shipbuilding Co. from which he retired in the 1960s.

Mr. O'Connor was always involved in his community as well as parish and Catholic-associated organizations. He was a member of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick and the Legion of Mary.

He was active in the Knights of Columbus and was a fourth-degree knight in the San Miguel Council.

He was a past grand knight and past chapter president in the San Diego Diocese.

He was also past grand commander of the Order of the Alhambra.

Mr. O'Connor's other interests included sports like football, baseball and basketball. He remained actively involved in following the games on TV and the radio up until the time of his death.

He enjoyed bridge, crossword puzzles and traveling well into his 80s.

Survivors include two sisters, Ruth MacMahon of St. Paul, Minnesota and Mary Kelley of Chicago, Illinois.

He also leaves numerous nieces, nephew, godchildren and close friends.

A funeral mass and rosary were held Saturday, February 16 at St. John of the Cross Church.

Interment followed immediately at Holy Cross Cemetery.

All arrangements were handled by Conrad Mortuary in Lemon Grove.

San Altos celebrates Literature Week

Fourth and fifth grade students at San Altos Elementary School filed quietly into the school cafeteria last Thursday, carrying blankets, pillows, sleeping bags, and most important of all--books, but they weren't having a noisy slumber party, they were about to participate in a Read-a-thon.

Students read quietly for one-half hour from books ranging from classics, such as Island of the Blue Dolphins, to the book version of the hit movie, Home Alone, as a part of a week-long celebration of literature.

This event was just one of many literary events to make reading (and learning) more fun for students.

News of a friend in Saudi Arabia

Dear Editor:

Kimberly Morrison, formerly employed by Chadwell Chiropractic in Lemon Grove, has now been serving six months in the active Army Reserves.

She is with the 316th Quartermaster--Water Purification Unit in Saudi Arabia.

Ms. Morrison and I write each other a couple of times a month. It takes about 21/2 weeks for a letter to get from her to me. Ms. Morrison is a single mom. She has a four-year-old son named Brandon who is currently staying with grandma. Kim says she can't wait to get back to wonderful Lemon Grove to assist me in serving all of our wonderful patients.

Her tour of duty will be between six months and one year.

Sincerely,
Mark A. Chadwell, D.C.

Alternative care for Alzheimer's patients offered

A new heath care program for persons diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease or other brain dementia is now fully operative at Mount Miguel Covenant Village, a continuing-care retirement community in Spring Valley. Residents of the Mount Miguel Health Facility are from residences within the Mount Miguel campus and from the general public.

"These patientst have special needs," said Ingrid Kleven, administrator of the facility. Therefore, a separate specialized care program has been developed for thier needs.

The program recognizes that Alzheimer's disease and other dementias not only affect the patients but their families as well. A family support group has been established at the facility, and meets monthly to discuss coping with these problems.

The Alzheimer's and other brain dementias unit at Mount Miguel Covenant Village, located at 325 Kempton St. in Spring Valley, now has capacity for a few more patients. About 90 volunteer workers are normally involved at the health facility. For more information, call Ms. Kleven at 479-4790.

The Review welcomes news and pictures of local armed services personnel serving in the Gulf.
